INFORMATION

- 1 A valid nomination covers all credit union property; that property may be assigned to one person or divided between various nominees. Any clearly identified person can be a nominee - it does not necessarily have to be a next of kin.
- 2 Where only one person is nominated, that person will be the sole beneficiary of your credit union property subject to the maximum permitted by law.
- 3 The nomination is separate to your Will and not revocable or variable by a Will or any codicil to it.
- 4 Your marriage after completing a nomination automatically revokes that nomination – you should complete a new nomination at that time.
- 5 Death of the nominee (prior to that of the nominator) automatically revokes that nomination – you should complete a new nomination at that time.
- 6 Completion of a new nomination revokes all previous nominations
- 7 In order to be valid, the form of nomination must either:
 - a be made in a book at the registered office of the Credit Union; or
 - b be delivered to the registered office of the Credit Union during your lifetime
